

Jennifer Aniston Saves Dog

The actress catches a Siberian Husky running loose along busy Sunset Boulevard.

Posted: January 27, 2009, 5 a.m. EST

Jennifer Aniston starred in a doggie drama over the weekend, and no, it wasn't "Marley & Me."

Aniston was driving on Sunset Boulevard in Beverly Hills when she spotted a Siberian Husky running loose along the busy road. The actress pulled over to the side, jumped out of her car, and slowly approached the dog.

Aniston managed to grab the dog by its collar. A nearby paparazzo – who caught most of the scene on film – had seen the dog escape from a yard and went to alert the owner.

Aniston owns several dogs herself, and talks about them frequently during interviews. While promoting "Marley & Me" before the holidays, Aniston explained how dogs are superior to men in an interview with USA Today.

"Men come and go but there really is no relationship like the one you have with a dog," Aniston said. "But then they don't live as long as they should.

"You have to say goodbye way too soon," she added. "It's just so sad. It makes me so sad. But their love is unconditional and I love that."