

Housetraining From Day One

Use persistence and lots of praise to teach your pup potty manners.

Maryann Mott

Posted: Thu Jan 27 00:00:00 PST 2005

During your lunch break, go home to let your puppy outside. If you can't, consider hiring a pet sitter, or asking a neighbor. Housetraining pads are an unnecessary step in the housetraining process, according to Jackson. Your puppy is capable of learning right from the start that the appropriate place to eliminate is outside. When an accident happens, don't yell, hit or rub his nose in the mess. If you catch puppy in the act, clap your hands and startle him, she says. Then scoop him up, take him to the backyard, and reward him for finishing out there.

If he goes to the bathroom but you didn't see him do it, just clean up the mess. Don't say or do anything. Your pup will start reliably going outside within several weeks, but Jackson warns not to let him have too much freedom, too soon. It can take up to nine months, she says, before he's fully trained.

- Get More Puppy Training Tips -